Rhodes State College's Manufacturing Program Gets National Recognition

LIMA, Oh - The Manufacturing Institute, an affiliate of the National Association of Manufacturers, has recognized Rhodes State's manufacturing technology program as outstanding and meeting industry standards.

Rhodes State is now a part of the M-List, which recognizes high schools, community colleges, and universities that have technical programs that align to industry certifications in areas such as production, welding, and machining. Rhodes State is being honored because the College offers options to earn credentials as part of its Manufacturing Technology Program. Enrolled students are eligible to receive certifications from the Manufacturing Skills Standards Council, along with their college credit.

The Manufacturing Institute deals with the attraction, qualification and development of world-class manufacturing talent.
