

DID YOU KNOW...

You can get college credit for work experience?

Your work and community services experiences might apply toward college credit

Have you worked five or more years in your field? Or, have you been active in community organizations?

If so, your experience, as well as any certificates you have acquired from seminars, workshops, in-service training or other continuing education and professional development activities, may count as credit toward a certificate or degree at Rhodes State College.

Consider the advantages of credit-for experience:

- Saves you or your employer money in tuition and related costs.
- Helps you earn your certificate or degree sooner.
- Helps you decide which area to pursue your certificate or degree.
